

Common Application Essay Being a person belonging to an inferior race, I have faced multiple obstacles while going through my academic timeline. These experiences have honed my personality and allowed me to act with resilience. At Walden University, I aspire to be a part of a doctoral degree in nursing as I believe that the institute offers an inclusive and cooperative environment for everyone. I have also observed that the students who have graduated from this university are better versions of themselves since they have worked in an environment where they were valued. Since I have past experiences of racial bullying and academic stress combined, I am an appropriate candidate for this university. I also have the characteristics of empathy, resilience, and compassion that help me become a good nursing practitioner. Another key incident of my life that has shaped me is the loss of my grandmother. I was very close to her, and she died when I was at a crucial stage in my academic life. At this point in time, I lost my focus on my studies to the extent that I almost failed one of the courses. Moreover, I was also facing some bullies belonging to superior races, which took an additional toll on my mental health. However, I still managed to go through this and graduated on time. This experience was a changing point in life and made me realize that no matter what happens, I will be able to get through it. Hence, I would be a valuable addition to Walden university and I truly wish to show my full potential.
