My immediate career goal is to be a strategy consultant in a top firm like McKinsey or BCG where I will be exposed to the working of various industries and geographies with complex business issues. This position will also enable me to improve my critical decision making, acquire executive level communication as well as how high-impact organizations can convert strategy into practical results. I have witnessed as a sales and marketing specialist how would-be products and inspired departments fail when there is no consistent strategy and coordinated leadership. Consultant profession will allow me to fill this gap and speed up my growth as a business leader. My career ambitions in the long run are based on becoming an executive in an expanded company and ultimately building a business opportunity clubbed on sustainable and inclusive business solutions. I am also committed to creating organizations that will be not only profitable but also organizations that will help in solving the social and economic problems in the world, particularly in the developing world where innovation and ethical leadership are still required. I also hope to be a leader who incorporates fiscal discipline and value creating to society in the long term. Gaining an MBA at Harvard Business school will play a pivotal role in the accomplishment of these goals. The pursuit of my studies at Harvard Business School will assist me in sharpening my abilities of making sound decisions based on the exposure to real problems in business. Additional course areas that are relevant such as Leadership, Organization Behavior, and Strategy will enrich my skills of working with diverse teams and developing scalable business models. HBS community is also quite essential. The ability to study alongside such a variety of students, who have different international and professional experiences will assist in opening my mind and destroying my assumptions. The focus of the School on the leaders who make a difference is something that I find agreeable with my goal to
