Scholarship Essay My identity has influenced my orientation in education, ambition and opportunity. Being a student of underrepresented background, I have acquired the practice of advocating myself, finding community, and persevering in environments in which I felt invisible at times. The experiences made me stronger and enhanced my purpose. Instead of making me a limited person, my identity has promoted development. It has taught me how to appreciate other views and help people who go through the same experiences, as well as to be empathetic as a leader. I have also taken up chances to mentor colleagues and take part in programs encouraging inclusion and self-confidence. This scholarship is a symptom of identity and hard work. It confirms that different voices should be allowed within the academic and professional circles, particularly in those areas where representation is important. I will always take this opportunity seriously by ensuring that I remain an excellent student and a productive member of my society. I would also like to use my research not only to achieve my own progress, but also to inspire people, break the barriers, and provide opportunities in places where there were barriers earlier. I would like to demonstrate that one does not have to change his or her values or identity to succeed. The fact of my background is not a brand that restricts me; it is a strength that makes me more determined, and it provides my worldview. It has taught me to become resilient, empathic, and responsible. In following my dreams with honesty and intent, I also hope to be the living example that even in meaningful progress, it is possible to do so without losing my identity, and that by doing so, I can inspire people to improve the situation as well.
